

My One Page Profile:

Dr Imogen Howarth: Deputy Principal Educational Psychologist

imogen.howarth@suffolk.gov.uk

How best to support me?

- I like to problem-solve and reframe with colleagues: I value opportunities to work systemically with a range of other agencies.
- IT systems that are pioneering and supportive.
- Maintaining a reflective space: time to step back and enable more creative, collaborative breadth.

What is important to me?

- Leading an experienced team where colleagues feel safe, valued and heard.
- Seeking opportunities to extend everyone's skills and share knowledge.
- CPD that is varied, future-focused and which spans different psychological themes, enabling specialisms to form and grow.
- Gathering children's views and keeping these central.
- My interests are varied and include sleep, autism, person-centred communication, and neuropsychology.

What people like and admire about me?

Colleagues say I am very person-centred and that I look for ideas to help every individual. I am flexible with my time and constantly evolve new opportunities to nurture others' development.

Using my IT skills, I research and apply psychological, creative solutions and collaborate with schools and families to generate innovative, practical ideas.

My team see me as passionate, enthusiastic, confident and a hard worker. I am a clear, reflective and strategic thinker, and schools say that they find my reports and consultations very helpful.